Haynes Studios

From 1884 through 1915 F. Jay Haynes conducted a service industry in Yellowstone National Park making and selling souvenir photographs, taking pictures of tour parties, and publishing graphic souvenirs such as postcards and souvenir viewbooks. In 1916 National Park Service director Stephen Mather mandated the reorganization of concessions in YNP from licensed competitors into regulated monopolies. F. Jay Haynes was instructed to retire from all business in the Park, to dispose of his Yellowstone-Western Stage Company (the photo concession had been transferred to Jack the previous year), and sell his remaining interests in the photographic business to son Jack and in the various Yellowstone camping companies. Jack bought out F. Jay Haynes' photography business in Yellowstone at the turn of 1917. Jack followed his father's pattern and operated the concession and Saint Paul studios under the name "J.E. Haynes."

In 1924 Jack and wife Margaret Haynes reincorporated "J.E. Haynes" under Minnesota laws with the name Haynes Picture Shops. The well-known stores operated in Yellowstone until Isabel sold the entire concern to Hamilton Stores in 1968. In 1937 Haynes created Haynes Inc. to oversee the company's publishing and manage the retail outlets, which retained the Haynes Picture Shops name. Haynes operated under this arrangement until 1945 when the base of operations moved from Saint Paul to Bozeman, Montana, and the incorporation was transferred west. A result of a concession negotiation, in 1949 Jack and Isabel drew daughter Lida into the business when they incorporated Haynes Studios Inc., a move that would allow the family to conduct business outside Yellowstone National Park without compromising their park concession. Until the late 1950s the Haynes maintained a photoprinting plant in Saint Paul, Minnesota (which also served annually as the employee recruiting station); the Haynes' offices in Bozeman, Montana, took care of printing and publishing orders for Haynes' souvenirs and guidebooks and served as a seasonal warehouse location. The Haynes Picture Shops in Yellowstone bought their stock through Haynes Inc. from the Haynes Studios.

The physical facilities at the time Jack assumed his father's business consisted of the studio at Mammoth Hot Springs (which included a developing and printing plant as well as serving as the in-Park office), the Log Cabin Studio in Upper Basin, and hotel stands at Mammoth, Canyon, and Lake. F. Jay Haynes had added film developing to his Park business in 1911 to meet the needs of amateur photographers. After World War II the nature of tourism again changed and average time spent in the park decreased. In-Park developing became less significant and Jack dropped the service in 1948. To compete with other concessioners in the park in 1935 Jack constructed a general store at Tower Falls upon the site of the old Yellowstone-Western Stage Co. lunch station, which stood in use until 1959 when it was replaced with the building standing today. The Log Cabin Studio was disassembled from its site in front of Old Faithful Inn and moved behind the Inn in 1932 to operate as a photo developing and printing plant and a new store was built for Haynes. A shop in the main Lodge building at Canyon Village was opened in 1960 when the Canyon Hotel shop and the small free-standing shop was closed in 1959. Haynes also operated a shop, one of their largest, at Fishing Bridge. At the peak of its activity 21 Haynes Picture Shops' locations served the Yellowstone tourist.

After Jack Haynes passed away in 1962 company guidance was assumed by his widow Isabel Haynes. She carried the business for five more years and then sold the entire Haynes concern and assets to Hamilton Stores.

Frank Jay Haynes (1853-1921)

Photographer F. Jay Haynes was one of the 19th century Northwest's best-known individuals. Beginning with a studio business in Moorhead, Minnesota, on the Minnesota-Dakota Territory border, Haynes became well known for his photographs of the great bonanza farms of the 1870s; for his portraits of Indians; his views of the Northern Pacific Rail Road route; and most especially for his successful career as photographer and concessionaire in Yellowstone National Park. Haynes toured the park with his camera every year between 1881 and his death forty years later. First selling photoprints, then pictorial souvenirs, and eventually postcards, Haynes' images were probably the most widely distributed and popularly recognized of any photographer of the American West. Between 1885 and 1905 Haynes also operated a travelling photo studio in a converted Pullman railroad car. This mobility not only made Haynes Palace Studio Car one of the best-known features of the Northern Pacific, but also gave him camera access to sights from the Great Lakes to Puget Sound.

Haynes' base of operations began in Moorhead, Minnesota, was moved to Fargo, North Dakota, in 1879 and in 1889 to Saint Paul, Minnesota. There he maintained a central studio and photo printing operation, and operated winter offices for his Studio Car and Yellowstone Park photography and transportation concessions, the Monida and Yellowstone and later Yellowstone-Western Stage companies. The Studio Car ceased travelling after the 1904 season and Haynes severed his ties to the Northern Pacific to court ties to the Union Pacific, a working relationship that fed the growing stage line he loved. When the Secretary of the Interior cancelled the MY concession lease in September, 1913, as a result of a suit, Haynes regrouped and was able to have a new lease renegotiated by the end of the year. It was in force until the consolidation of Park concessions in 1916, the year that Haynes retired and sold his business to his son Jack Ellis Haynes. Yellowstone's "Grand Old Man" still made annual trips to the Park until heart failure claimed him in 1921.

Jack Ellis Haynes (1884-1962)

Jack E. Haynes was born to photographer F. Jay Haynes and Lily Snyder Haynes at Fargo, North Dakota, September 27, 1884; months after his father had been granted his first concession license to operate a photography studio in Yellowstone National Park. The last of the Haynes' three children, Jack nonetheless became his father's heir in the family business, especially after the untimely death of his brother George O. Haynes.

The Haynes moved from Fargo to Saint Paul, Minnesota, in 1889 where a new studio was opened. Jack began working in the family photographic business at a relatively young age. He joined his father for summers in Yellowstone in 1897 and in 1905 began managing the F. Jay Haynes' Upper Basin studio between spring and fall college terms. An accomplished musician, Jack E. Haynes organized a dance band that played in Saint Paul, an activity which helped finance his education. After graduating from the University of Minnesota in 1908 with a degree in mining engineering he became a full-time employee and photographer, gradually being given more management responsibility. In 1910 F. Jay Haynes turned over editorial control of his popular Yellowstone guidebook to his son, and it was Jack who turned the book from a descriptive travel narrative into a true guidebook of sites and features. For fifty years Jack carried editorial responsibility for what became Yellowstone's most popular guidebook, the Haynes Guide. He painstakingly measured road distances, made corrections to mountain elevations and drew all maps himself, a project which occupied him each fall until 1962.

Isabel M. Haynes (1899-1993)

Isabel Nauwerth Haynes was born October 25, 1899 in Traer, Iowa. She attended the University of Iowa, graduating in 1921 with a teaching certificate. In 1922, Isabel began her forty-five year association with Yellowstone National Park taking a summer job with Yellowstone Camps and Lodge Company. She eventually spent three years as manager of Roosevelt Lodge after completing a resort management program in California. During her employment in Yellowstone, Isabel met Jack Ellis Haynes whom she married in 1930. Isabel became an integral part of the Haynes company. During the winter months, she recruited Minnesota college students looking to spend their summers in the park and managed the Yellowstone stores during the season. Isabel and Jack's only child, Lida, was born in 1932, but died suddenly in a car accident in 1952. As a gift to the youth of Montana, the Haynes Foundation was created by Jack and Isabel in 1958 as a way to provide scholarships to the state's Universities. After her husband's death in 1962, Isabel assumed full control of the Haynes Picture shops, running them until selling out to Hamilton Stores in 1969. Mrs. Haynes was an active citizen in the Bozeman community and the state of Montana. She was honored with many awards including the MSU Blue and Gold award, honorary doctorates from M. S. U. and Carroll College, and the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce's Sperry award. Isabel Haynes passed away in Bozeman April 7, 1993.
